Lynn Davis, M.Ed., is a project manager for YMCA of the USA for the Healthier Communities Initiatives, based in Washington, DC. Lynn provides technical assistance to communities through the ACHIEVE project, assisting communities with shaping policies that lead to improved nutrition, physical activity and nutrition outcomes in schools, worksites and communities at large.

Originally from Texas, Lynn received her Master's degree in Health Promotion from the University of Texas at Austin in 2005. She then worked as a program coordinator for Steps to a Healthier Austin, where she helped manage over 30 community partners and approximately 10 million dollars in funding.

Prior to her career in public health, Lynn worked as a software consultant, and in the fields of newspaper and television journalism. Her grasp on media and training, plus her public health background uniquely qualify her to assist communities with making sweeping policy changes.

Personally, Lynn enjoys hiking with her dog, Cooper, biking the streets of Washington, DC, seeing live music, and taking road trips.
